

I knew it I know you

Our once incandescent love has vanished into incurable despair,
The trail of heart-bursting memories has lost all its importance,
Your love, which you once had sworn to only be mine, is now absorbed by someone else,
A land of beautiful, blooming flowers and sunshine all along, painted and designed through our love has now burned down into nothing but ashes, Now I see you with her, but every time our eyes meet, I can't help but recognize that the radiant shine that had surrounded your ocean-blue eyes is gone,
She does not fulfill you – I can feel it,
But who am I to judge? Am I already that conceited?
I am filled with long-lasting emptiness and no desire to step out of my zone,
With my soliloquies, I think I'm better off alone, Parting our bond of fate-determined relation had put an enormous effect on me, just like a curse forcing me to awaken with threats and common allegations in my head.

If I didn't know any better, I'd say I think so do you,
But you don't show or tell the truth.
You isolated yourself from any beloved or close person
Does it leave you paranoid and cursing?
She doesn't care about anything but herself,
Does it benefit your weak pulsing health?
Blinded by the irritation and the pure pain of dissolving us you couldn't figure out what's for your greater good,
But she isn't.
I know she isn't the one for your lifetime,
She's not the one to carry on your lifeline, Between ignorant self-obsession and a horrible sense of empathy and entitlement she's just a pathological attention seeker.
But who am I to say this,
And who am I to you,
Say you really don't love me anymore and paint my world the darkest blue,
Come back running and take my hand and swear to be forever mine,
And I'll leave you hanging like you did the first time.
